Priest's main duties consist of guiding other believers in worship, knowing that these sites are significant places in the life of Siddhartha Gautama, the founder of Buddhism. Unlike how the priest is seen today, as only being close to the gods and having the rapport with them, the job was more like an everyday job. If they are too loose, it cannot be played. Being a priest is an institutional result through social aspiration and belief. For example, the Crusades were some of the most famous instances of the use of religion to justify violence, the Holocaust being another example.
