I got into isolated villages where there was an obvious genetic component to some orthodontic situations. While a majority of the posts agreed on the existence of an association between periodontal and heart diseases, two dentists argued for no association from their personal or clinical experience.

Is it possible the methotrexate was a causative factor, or just coincidence? Income from the Private Practice of Dentistry. As for what motivated dentists to ask questions on the oral-systemic connection, dentists initiated questions when they came across a challenging patient, heard about a patient case from a colleague or read a relevant research article. A common periodontal pathogen has an adverse association with both acute and chronic periodontitis. It is not pathologic to have 3rd molars.
