Air Transport Command (ATC) was a United States Air Force unit that was created during World War II as the strategic airlift component of the United States Army Air Forces. It had two main missions, the first being the delivery of supplies and ATC's origins begin during World War I with the need to transport aircraft supplies.

The Hump was the name given by Allied pilots in the Second World War to the eastern end of Because the AAF had no previous airlift experience as a basis for planning, it assigned From its onset, the air route was predicated on operating two branches, The first mission "over the hump" took place on 8 April
